PENTHOUSE WEST RESIDENCE

Inspired by the ocean view, Gorsline pulled the outdoors in with a calming color palette to create a relaxed vibe at the Penthouse West Residence. She even had the mirrors angled just right so you can see the ocean's reflection upon entering the space.

“People spend their lives in this space, raise their kids, entertain their friends in this space—and you are a part of that.”

LS: What strikes you first about a room?

Marcie Gorsline: It's the mood or lighting. When I meet a client and see their space—it speaks to me, and I try and honor the space. If I put down a fabric that I thought might look good, I'll know right away if it's a big 'no.' My gut tells me this. That comes from building confidence in the beginning of my career. You have to listen to those little cues.

LS: Not only are you a designer, but you're also an artist, and you started your career painting. Do you use your fine art skills in your design work?

MG: In the beginning, being able to picture a completed project helped me transition because that's what I did with my art. People ask me if I miss art, but there is something about design, especially projects that I get to design from the ground up, that give me that same high. When things go wrong, I get an adrenaline rush from it. I think, how are we going to fix it? The challenges that come along inspire and reinvigorate me. And it's not only the challenges; I love seeing a client live in a house they are happy with. People spend their lives in this space, raise their kids, entertain their friends in this space—and you are a part of that.
